What harm can it do if a man told a good lusty lie in a worthy cause and for the sake of the Christian churches? —Luther (Lenz: Briefwechsel, Vol. 1, Pg. 373)
Bryan Denlinger is a batshit crazy, Bible pounding crank, windbag, hatemonger and unemployed, self-proclaimed priest-turned-blowhard demagogue running an internet ministry alternately known as the King James Video Ministries or the Bible Believers Fellowship. Denlinger is known for his conspiracy theories and wingnuttery. Denlinger maintains a YouTube channel under the username husky394xp with over 1000 video surveys and over 20,000 subscribers. He is the founder of his own Christian cult (see note below) of his own tradition, Denlingerism. Denlinger encapsulates America Protestant Christian phenomena in a microcosm. The Mayflower brought to America a rag tag group of unpopular, non-conformist English dissenters who face persecution at the hands of fellow Protestants, be it the reformed church in the Netherlands or the established Church of England. [1] Religion from the beginning of the American experience has been cynical of authority, be it temporally or spiritually. [2] This cynicism towards authority permeated the environment in which the fundamental instruments of the United States (Declaration of Independence, The United States Constitution, and The Bill of Rights) were written. Early in the American experience, there was always the fear that the Catholic Church would extend its influence to the American colonies especially with Spain in the south and the territory of New France, which stretched from the Gulf of Mexico to the Nunavik completely surrounding the colonies. The Jesuits were the shock troops of the counter-reform entrusted with the care of Catholics in Protestant regions, where Catholics faced persecution, conversion of territories lost to Protestants in Catholic kingdoms and missionary work outside Europe. [3] A large part of the Missionary of the Jesuits was accomplished through education, preaching, controversy, debate, and scholarship. The Jesuits succeeded in converting areas of Europe, but received much antipathy and suspicion from the Protestants. [3] Attempts to understand Denlinger's weltanschauung cannot be conducted outside of this context in the American experience. Denlinger is not affiliated with any Christian organized religion or any religious association and is therefore considered a non-denominational independent Christian. He describes his Church as a free church under the direction of Jesus Christ. [4] He often refers to himself and others who share his faith and views simply as Bible believers and his group as a Bible believing communion or Bible devout Christian. [5] However, this is only descriptive in terms of who they are and not the self-confessed real name of the cult. [5] Due to the lack of a self-given correct name, denlingerism has been used as a proper name for the system of faith and denlingerist for which follows the belief system, which is the usual naming of a belief system after its founder. This post follows this already well-established convention. His religious views are based primarily on his personal reading and interpretation of the Bible and what the spirit and Jesus reveal to him as he reads the Bible. He preaches a gospel of repentance followed by Jesus' acceptance as Lord and Savior. When a person is saved, they are always saved within the current distribution. [6] While Denlinger does not consider himself a named prophet, Denlinger considers himself a prophet, as he performs the work of a prophet and should be considered a prophet of God. Mainline Protestant Christians do not consider Denlingerists to be Christian because of Denlingerism's version of the Trinity is of a Gnostic Sabirian taste.[8] therefore belonged to the non-Christian branch of Protestantism. Other Christians have dubbed his version of trinity unitary modalism even though tripartite hymnism or tripartite sabirianism are more accurate descriptions of the deity. Denlingerism denies three persons and chooses a single person consisting of body (Jesus), soul (father) and spirit (spirit). [8] However, since Denlinger considers himself a Christian, he is considered a Christian for this post, which gives his claim the benefit of the doubt. Some of Denlinger's beliefs include: It's not such a wonderful life [edit] The Denlingers preach about whether insurance is scripture. If you were wondering the answer is NO! Denlinger was born in 1975 and grew up in Strasberg, Pennsylvania, and attended Pequea Valley High School. His father was a mennonite and is of Bavarian-Tyrolean Protestant descent. High school for Denlinger was a time to mess around and be stupid and kept him from being in full-time employment. [12] According to Denlinger I wasn't about to go to some university and spend time sitting at a desk and reading some books; I had no interest in that. Instead, he began working as a boatbuilder at Susquehanna Santee Boat Works and then as a forester and a lumberjack. He now lives near Bridgewater, Maine. [13] Given his disdain for education, Denlinger does not pursue higher education. Since he was saved, he has devoted his life to preparing a series of paranoiac conspiratorial rants, which he describes as studies, all backed up by verses in his King James Bible. Since 2012, Bryan Denlinger has been married to Katherine Kucera, a partner and co-preacher in his Bible faith ministry. Denlinger attended calvary Monument Bible Church, an independent non-denominational church in Paradise, PA. From the age of seventeen his church attendance was sporadic, usually attending Lampeter United Methodist Church with his parents. [14] At the age of 25, he began attending a Cornerstone Baptist Church and later began attending a Berean Bible church (non-trinity) after being saved. He then left bereans due to problems and joined Mount Zion Baptist Church i i Pa. But early in his ministry, he claimed to have been rescued at age 8 by his Sunday school teacher and immediately began testifying to his classmates at school. While attending Zion Baptist Church on the Mountain, Denlinger volunteered to teach Sunday school. One of the requirements for teaching Sunday school was that he gave a police background check, which he thought was a little bit weird. [14] After falling out with the pastor, he began attending Liberty Baptist Church and later Country Chapel Baptist Church. [14] As was usually the case with Denlinger, much because of his rebellious nature, he feuded with the priest and the congregation, who forced his departure. Since then, he founded his own cult, which believes in what he means; a cult to its own taste. Denlinger imagines primitivism to be the ideal that went into the Bible. When he wanted to return to the primitivism of the early church age and wanted to move out of the shoveled on his parents' property, which he had called home since he married Katherine, he began looking for a connection to be bought to get away from the world. After failing to find any affordable property in Pennsylvania, a subscriber made him decide to be a nuisance to the state of Maine instead. [15] The area around his home growing up had enough well-established batshit crazy windbags (the likes of his mentor Eric Jon Phelps) according to the Southern Poverty Law Center, that they proved too much competition for up and coming whippersnapper. In 1997, Denlinger entered the business as the wood-stitcher. Much of his work consisted of turning spinning tops, wooden bows and ornamental curiosities, which he exhibited at art galleries and craft shows. [13] He also made some furniture during this period. When asked what his motivation was, he indicated that it was just to make money. He didn't find the work that meets doing things for rich people. But he still considers himself a woodturner of commerce [13] perhaps so that he can maintain his claim to have come from the art world. After a trip to Honduras, he had a coming-to-good moment, got saved again, and took an interest in the Bible. At this point he also got into the logging business. He felled trees and sold them as wood or timber mills in the area to make a living. [13] After watching some Peter Ruckman videos, listening to his audio cassettes, and reading some of his books, Denlinger began creating some of his own media content and began distributing these. At the urging of others, he began marketing these through his own ministry and others' web stores. [13] Both Denlingers are given to gossip and scattering backslang about individuals they have known in the past. They have used their Youtube channel to attack those they consider to have offended them in some way, including reading their private correspondence. Because of Bryan Denlinger's abusive argumentative in nature, he has had ongoing feuds with his family[16] and neighbors, neighbours, some of them in his videos as Satanists, unsaved, thugs, backstabbers or Catholics. Katherine once harangued her parents about joining the Denlinger cult and getting rescued. Her parents, who seem to have more sense than their daughter, were immediately ejected by the Denlingers from their home when they came to visit. [16] In 2009 denlinger began a YouTube channel under the name husky394xp, which was named after the Husqvarna 394 XP chainsaw, which he used for his logging business. The husky394xp canal was at one time dedicated to felling trees for wood or timber. This channel will later become the main ministry channel. The various ministries such as the Bible Believers Fellowship and King James bible ministries have been profitable enough that Dellinger has been able to give up paid employment and has instead focused on developing its cult ministries on the Internet. Drink Drano [edit] Drano, a choice of a new generation of cultists to test their spirits. Denlinger has yet to test his own spirit of judgment purposes. Denlinger comes across as extremely arrogant and proud, which he uses to make up for his own shortcomings in actual religious education and education. Most of his competition has some of both and has been ordained to the ministry, while Denlinger simply took the Bible and began pounding it around under the impression that he is the Ibo of the Holy Spirit. He claims that those who attack or condemn him commit an unforgivable sin because anyone who attacks him attacks the Holy Spirit in him. He has an extreme inferiority complex and compensates for it in aggressiveness towards his betters, going so far as to recommend that his competition drink Drano or sulfuric acid to test their spirit and do so on camera in full view of their subscribers. [17] Many have waited and wondered when Denlinger will test his own mood by drinking Drano, but no one has held his breath. Denlinger has yet to prove to his cultists that he has the spirit of drinking either Drano or sulphuric acid. In a video the sermon alludes to the Jonestown massacre. Denlinger, exhibiting his knowledge of geography that the spirit he gave him, claimed that the Jonestown massacre took place in Africa. The incident took place in Guyana, a country in South America. Further, Denlinger claims that Jim Jones became of God for hitting the Bible. [17] He asks why anyone filled with the spirit would hit the Bible, despite in one of his own trades he is seen hitting the Bible repeatedly. The video was later deleted. Mirror, mirror on the wall [edit] Artiste extraordinaire. Bryan Denlinger found the Catholic painting of the announcement of the Spanish Baroque painter Bartolomé Esteban Murillo tasteless and pornographic. [19] Brianus Denlingerum locuta est, causa finita est. Given the gullible and half-wittedness of his followers, Denlinger, ever narcissistic oaf, grooms themselves to be a savant among them, a man of culture and learning. Given the imbecility of his followers as he bamboozles, they form a loyal cult of sycophants drinking his Drano Kool support. Denlinger claims to be a rational man of science, [20] but has irrational, emotional meltdowns when he is chastened or questioned by his fellow Bible-pounding windbags. Denlinger considers himself an artist and comes from the art world. [21] He believes that when he worked as a woodturner, he is an artist and claims to know about art. But he considers most art a perversion. Denlinger plays the part of the legendary village idiot in a sermon in which he preached against medieval and Renaissance art, which he called pornographic and pagan. [19] According to Denlinger such art encourages paedophilia and is the work of perverse. The purpose of the sermon was to awaken the Catholic people to the fact that their system has always been corrupt and that these paintings have no basis in writing, and simply show the perversion of the Catholic artists who painted them. [19] He continues to ask his audience, pointing to cherub angels, where in the Bible are these naked babies with wing flying in full nudity? [19] You have to keep an eye on this thing of art for okay. I was in the art field for a couple of years and I know a lot of this stuff, you know, and they used to just push the envelope of what's acceptable and they call it art. Okay. You paint naked things and stuff all the time, you're a pervert! Okay. Don't tell me oh because I respect the human body and hm-mm sure you do. I was around that thing, I know what, you know, how that thing works.-Preaching - Catholic child pornography? He considers all artists perverses of one kind or another. He claims to be an expert in pornography given his previous experience as a consumer of porn. [22] While little baby peepes do not make any (brisk, there is) cuddle, that is not the case with god's prophet, Denlinger, little baby angels, without a doubt, makes this holy man of God (whom he claims to be) stand upright. In the FAQ Answering an Agnostic question, Denlinger imagines being the safest kind of guy to deal with because he is held to a standard. [14] Unfortunately, his default is his own interpretation of a poorly translated Bible (in fact, the worst according to a computer program designed for the task[23]), which he uses to his own advantage and to confirm his own pre-existing bias. Given that he does not hold the fathers of the church who were close to the apostolic source as a standard of faith or interpretation[14] gives him the freedom to read something his little heart desires in his personal interpretation, which is his standard eisegesis exegese. Since he has positioned himself as an adjudicator, what the Bible is called, he is his own standard, nothing more, nothing less. While Denlinger trying to engage with more intelligent, educated, rational and naturally skeptical people, most of them tend to give him a wide berth as soon as the first insanity or counterfactual denlingerism is spewed to their advantage. Denlinger claims to be a man of God and claims those who attack him attack the spirit of him. After all, he knows he has swallowed a spirit, feathers and all. As the prophet he claims to be, he often reminds his followers that the spirit speaks to him and through him, [17] He even considers himself a saint. Influence[edit] Denlinger exhibits his extensive collection of Peter S. Ruckman's musings, which influenced his theology. Much of Denlinger's talking points point to a worldview strongly influenced by the screams and ravings of Eric Jon Phelps and Peter S. Ruckman, especially[24] that share similar perspectives on religion, race, and culture. Denlinger early in his ministry claimed to be a Ruckmanite. On issues like anti-miscegenation, segregation, race relations and culture, Denlinger's views are a copy of those of Phelps, while theologically his views are aligned with the ruckman. The book Vatican Assassins authored by Phelps has greatly influenced and shaped Denlinger's thinking one would come to believe that this book was the biggest influence on his worldview saving the King James Version of the Bible and Ruckman's comments on the Bible. These books form the basis of much of Denlingers' weltanschauung. Perhaps, the two writers confirmed Denlinger's original prejudices, which already existed, but it's clear that he has conformed to and adopted himself to the ideas that Ruckman and Phelps though other influences abound. Denlinger has described both Ruckman and Phelps as two phenomenal highly intelligent men who have spent years in the ministry and have repeatedly defended them from their opponents. [26] Denlinger has also expressed support for Phelps' ethnostate ProBapt[Ca], [26] a white only Anglo-Saxon Protestant Baptist Calvinist nation (present-day Pennsylvania) who will use a paramilitary force based on Ton Ton Macoute to track down and execute all remaining Catholics (convert or die if Anglo-Saxon) and blacks (just die). [27] Jewish Catholics and Jesuits, the dirtiest of persons of all will be put to death immediately when they are found. [27] The one seen in batshit crazy fundies was different from the Mohammedan jihadists and their followers. At least, dealing with the Mohammedan one could pay to participate in optional Jizya protection plan. Another source of influence on both Denlinger and Phelps was Jack T. Chick of the Infamous Chick Tracts and Alberto Rivera. According to Rivera's account, he (Rivera) was a deep cover Jesuit who was tasked by the Vatican and jesuits to infiltrate Protestant organizations and churches. The reality, according to a study by Cornerstone Magazine, a Protestant Christian magazine, was a trust huckster who was wanted for fraud and extortion in He had arrest warrants issued for his arrest in New Jersey and Florida for fraud, credit card theft and writing bad checks[28][29] and was born a Protestant[29], not a Catholic as Rivera had claimed. Chick and Rivera formed much of the core of Denlinger's anti-Catholicism, which was reinforced by Phelps, who himself was influenced by Chick and Rivera. Mennonites-Anabaptist influence underlies much of Denlinger's worldview, which figures fairly strongly in Pennsylvania because of its origins as a land-grant by Charles II at the behest of William Penn for non-conformists of all stripes who suffered from religious persecution and discrimination from mainline Protestant churches in Europe. That was why Pennsylvania became a refuge for individuals or groups seeking religious freedom and worship as puritans in New England now established their own theocratic social order, began pursuing non-conformists who were not in line with their own non-conformist ideal. But this has made the state a magnet for hate groups, including Phelps and his church. This influence can be seen in his primitive, antisocial, bourgeois and anti-hierarchical views. The primitivism gives rise to his biblical lens of trying to restore the church, as he sees it, of the Bible. This can be seen in his claim that there are no church buildings and only house churches in the early church. His antisocial, anti-traditional and anti-hierarchical views range from church politics to his politics and his views on government, police and the military. The anti-traditionalism gives rise to his unconventional views deity/trinity. Since many of these views are more acceptable in the Region of Pennsylvania due to the origin of the state, Denlinger was surprised that these views are not so well received by society as a whole. Katherine Denlinger[edit] Katherine Jezebel Denlinger (sister Katherine) the certified crazy wife Bryan Denlinger. Bryan is not legally married to Katherine, as Bryan does not believe in buying a marriage certificate, but he was married to Katherine of God. Most people call this living together in sin, but not Bryan. Since Bryan refers to Katherine as his wife, this post will refer to Katherine as his wife. Katherine and his equally wingnuttery, petty-minded, passive-aggressive wife, Katherine, are co-preachers in his King James Video ministries. Much of Denlingers' published content consists of rantings and blathering against some event they consider a nefarious conspiracy. Their emotionally charged ravings are aimed at those who publish critical content, calling them punks, Luciferians, masons, Jesuits or idiots. Denlingers are the only known preachers in this cult. When she doesn't preach a sermon herself, she can count on bobing her head up and down, nodding in agreement and suddenly ejaculate some insanity goes back to her nodding in deal routine. Katherine grew up in Iowa and suffered from an early childhood, to which the doctors found no cure. [30] She suffers from a learning disability and found the educational framework of the classroom difficult[31] and was considered a slow learner[32]. Katherine attended Atlantic High School in Atlantic, I.A., but failed standardized tests and was sent for remedial courses. [30] She describes herself as a loner unable to make friends during this period. [30] While she was athletically gifted, she suffers from gender confusion, which she blames on playing sports like volleyball and court. [32] She ended up attending six universities and colleges, never able to find herself because of her learning difficulties. [32] She has been under psychiatric treatment on a regular basis. [30] She was raised a Lutheran (LCMS) by her parents[30] and attended Lutheran colleges and universities. [32] [31] But she often calls all these institutions Catholic. She claims she learned to commit the sin of drinking coffee while going lutheran Sunday school. [30] Katherine claims that she was a member of the U.S. military and military-industrial complex, where she claims to be working as a spoon. She reportedly served in the U.S. Navy between 2007 and 2010 in the Persian Gulf. [31] She was introduced by a serviceman to REX 84 documents, where she learned the evil of the U.S. government and held interrogation orders. [31] She began to see the United States as an evil country mired in sin espionage. She also discovered that the United States was developing a cyborg army. [31] While in the military, she was ordered to undergo a command-directed psychological examination due to anger management problems, after which she was sent back to duty. [12] She failed a subsequent psychological assessment and was honorably discharged from the military because of her psychological state. [32] She was disillusioned with Lutheranism and her family's chagrin sought non-mainstream Christian traditions. This led to a further deterioration of her relationship with her family. [31] Because of her involvement in these churches, she began to try to proselytize to her potential employers, and as can be expected, no one wanted to join her particular cult of the day and needless to say not find employment. [31] During this period, she began to move away from the technology of the world. [31] She began to come into contact with KJV-onlyists and met Bryan Denlinger through this movement. Katherine's sermons are pitted with back-biting, speech-bearing and gossip and preached in a loud, obnoxious way. Her husband considers those who exhibit these traits to be obsessed with the Jezebel spirit. [33] He makes an exception for his wife, so you would be wrong to consider her as a Jezebel, even if she meets her criteria for one. Denlingerism[edit] Denlinger invented the cult of Denlingerism in 2008, which he led Since. Most members of this cult are extremely loyal sheeple and as one might expect is from the lower echelons of income and intelligence. This cult is based on the sprawling rants teaching Bryan Denlinger and his equally bat-shit crazy wife Katherine. These teachings are presented as studies on Youtube and the Internet. These studies are usually elongated rambling paranoid rants, which rely on conspiracy theories intertwined with apophenia and pareidolia and every other logical fallacy a charlatan can be expected to employ to hoodwink the gullible gullible cultists. What is considered faith depends on what Denlinger believes the truth. Faith relies on the whim of Denlinger, who has changed his mind on occasion when it suits his fancy. Denlinger teaches that Bible faith in a tripartite deity Salvation through faith in the finished work of Jesus Christ on the Cross — Denlingerism confirms that Jesus died and paid the price of sin altogether, one can only repent and believe in Jesus. Eternal security for a truly born again Christian — Denlinger confirms that when a person is saved you come to heaven, no matter what you can do after that point. Dispensational reading of the Bible – Denlingerism argues that the Bible requires to be read per dispensation. Male authority in church and home - Denlingerism confirms that men are the boss of church and home. Beware that The Reverend Katherine Denlinger is exempt from this doctrine. Nonconformance and biblical separation from the world – Denlingerism argues that the Bible teaches nonconformance with the world and also separation from the World House church - Denlingerism argues that the Bible teaches that the Bible churches are the way to go. Missionary public ministry - God wants the message spread to the world. Literal 6-day creation about 6,000 years ago – Denlingerism confirms that the earth came to be 6,000 years ago and was created in six days. Heaven and Hell - Denlingerism confirms the existence of heaven and hell Satan - Denlingerism confirms the existence of Satan. Rejection of Music – Its personalism rejects all forms of Rock and Roll, Heavy Metal, and Rap music Sodomy a sin - Itslingnerism confirms that sodomy (read: homosexuality) is a sin. Abortion is murder - Denlingerism confirms that abortion is murder. Membership [edit] Currently there are over 700 members in his church. Membership in his house church, much like his mentor Eric Jon Phelps, is only opened to already saved Bible believers, without exception. Those who wish to join the cult are examined through an interview process in advance by to determine if they are saved Bible believers. Denlingers, guided by the spirit of them, will check with their spirit-o-meter, and if the candidate is endorsed by the spirit they will be welcomed into the house church by communion. When they are members, members are all obligated to get the gospel out. This can be achieved by street preaching, going door to door and visiting people, passing out Chick writings, and preparing and packing
